How should we think about the rights of minority groups in diverse societies? This course looks to political theory and legal practice in democratic polities around the globe in an attempt to identify morally defensible and politically viable answers to this question. Attention will focus upon the contemporary understanding of multiculturalism as it refers to a wide range of public policy measures designed to facilitate minority groups' practices and norms. For example, members of specific groups may receive exemptions from general laws or may seek a degree of autonomous jurisdiction over their internal affairs. The course will consist of three parts. The first part will explore the philosophical, political, and legal foundations of multiculturalism as a theory of differentiated citizenship. The second part will examine specific public policy arenas (such as education, family law, and criminal law) in which minority communities seek recognition and accommodation of their distinctive traditions and ways of life. The discussion will evaluate the potentially negative effects of multicultural policies on intra-group power hierarchies and inter-community relations. Examples will be drawn from the recent experiences of diverse societies in different regions of the world. The third and final part of the course will explore innovative institutional designs aimed at reducing the tension between the accommodation of cultural differences and the protection of individual rights. Taken together, the three parts of the course will address current debates about the most suitable standards for creating, sustaining and rearranging the interactions between the group, the state, and the individual.

Evaluation:

- Class participation (10%): Class meetings will be organized around a discussion of each week's readings. Class participation includes attendance, substantive participation in weekly discussions, and one in-class presentation of a comment paper (see below).
- A five-page comment paper (20%): The comment paper will be a critical assessment of one or more of the sources on the reading list. Comment papers are due at 4 p.m. on the Friday before the readings are scheduled to be discussed. Each student is expected to use the five-page comment paper to illuminate an important question in the reading or to develop their own coherent argument based on the readings. The submission of the comment paper will be accompanied by a short in-class presentation of the paper. Students must sign up for the oral presentation of one of their comment papers ahead of time, during the second meeting of the seminar.

- A final (approx. 20-25 page) research paper (70%): The final paper's topic must be pre-approved by the instructor. A one-page outline of your paper must be turned by 4:00 p.m., Thursday, November 14. The final paper is due by Friday, 4:00 p.m., December 19, 2002 (Records Office).

Required Reading Materials:

Reading material will draw on leading Canadian, American, and comparative case law and legislation, as well as contemporary political theory literature. The reading material is assembled in "Culture, Rights, and Equality: The Multiculturalism Debate in Comparative Perspective" Course Packet (CP), edited by Ayelet Shachar (University of Toronto Faculty of Law, 2002). The CP is available for purchase at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law Bookstore. The CP includes all the reading items but those drawn from the following two books:

Will Kymlicka and Wayne Norman, editors, Citizenship in Diverse Societies (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000).

Ayelet Shachar, Multicultural Jurisdictions: Cultural Differences and Women's Rights (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2001).

The two books are available for purchase at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law Bookstore. Additional copies have been placed on short-term reserve at the Bora Laskin Law Library.
